On view through Aug. 22 in the Graham Gund Gallery, which is located in the museum's new wing, the exhibition numbers about 500 17th-century objects that were lent by other museums, historical societies and private collectors. It runs the gamut from a map of New England when it was New France - in the eyes of the map maker, Samuel de Champlain - to portraits of the settlers themselves, their clothes, furniture, tools, domestic utensils, books and so on. From 1096 to 1204, Crusaders ravaged the Fertile Crescent. In 1258, the Mongols sacked Baghdad - then, like Beirut today, Islam's cultural and commercial metropolis. In 1492, the Arabs were expelled from Spain after seven centuries of brilliant rule. Past catastrophes provided occasions for renewal and change, investing Moslem civilization with unusual resiliency. The Arabs' current predicament is without parallel. Never before have they experienced a similar combination of wealth and weakness, material resources and moral bankruptcy.	False	By Eqbal Ahmad	1982-08-11	TX 950456

As a former United States official who in the 1970's worked on ways to reform welfare programs, I always thought that there was a lot of embarrassing truth in this remark and that it was aimed at Government reformers like me. But I'm not so sure now that I believe that things will get better for the poor. Research on the effects of the Administration's dramatic shift in domestic policy - it is based at Princeton University and being carried out across the country - is the reason for my new pessimism. Photography is a relatively young medium within the fine arts. While it sometimes seems that its short history already has been sifted with a very fine-toothed comb, it remains possible to discover the accomplishments of photographers unknown to the world or, if one is lucky, to happen upon a collection of photographic masterpieces in a relative's attic. It is, in short, possible to make photographic history as well as to learn it, a fact which gives the field an excitement lacking in the rest of art history and which attracts some of today's brightest and most ambitious young scholars.
